A search-warrant might reveal where the Kootenay Central Railway jumped off at.

If another Provincial election is slated, party lines will be called, but the result would probably be a mixture. But an election is not on yet yet.

Lately we have "cheered up" the mail service a few lines and we are pleased to note that two mails a week from Golden will be the result shortly.

A "quack" ad. has never yet appeared in THE OUTCROP—we will charge more for them than any other class of ads. Quack firms may as well save their postage.

Some mining men pursue a very small policy towards newspapers and the public generally. These men would do well to follow the Salvation Army officers policy. An exchange says that Army officers are instructed to give all information to any newspaper reporter who asks, even though they be misrepresented. The Army may be despised, yet they do good and are firm believers in the promotion of publicity.

The class of men referred to are those who do not want to give information of their doings. If a man is working for a few capitalistic cranks, his silence is understood and is to be pitied—he's afraid of losing his job. But if they are mining legitimately publicity can do no harm.

Their private business—details—is often interesting, but if they choose to keep that to themselves no one will in the least object.

Yet, in the name of wonder, what harm can it do any company or mine to tell about the work going on in the mine? How many men are working? The amount of work accomplished, or the amount of ore on the dump or in sight? Or the width of the ledge or paystreak, and so on and so forth?

It is generally conceded that when a mine looks favorable the management will admit it, and that when information is refused, that "something is wrong." Quite often this is a correct way of sizing up things, yet in some instances it is the reverse. Sometimes the owners want more area. A stock company, if working more on stock than mineral, give information according to market fluctuations.

Some managers withhold news from local papers for pure cussedness and in mine cases out of ten do the most missing themselves. It may be a mine manager's business to keep things to himself, but it is a reporter's business to find out those things—that is the way a reporter earns his grub. If he cannot get the news he is seeking from the manager he will from someone, and if it be wrong the manager can then thank himself.

Newspapers have before now printed hearsay news in the hope that if wrong, that it would bring out the truth, and usually they have been successful.

A few men consider that the few thousands of dollars paid for a group of claims is a philanthropic act and that their duty to the country is fulfilled. They have really been allowed a great privilege by the public for a small consideration and they owe to the public more than they are likely ever to pay even should they strike it rich, give employment to hundreds and be instrumental in the starting of other mines.

It is wonderful how these fellows can change their policy and become "good fellows" when they want anything from the public—when they want a portion of the public taxes.

They call at the local print place with a pocket full of Havanas and invite the editor out to have "something." Tell him what a fine fellow he is and that his editorials are just the "clear thing" for this marvellously rich district. That if this was not going to be the hub of the universe he should immigrate to New York. Then, their company have decided to spend unlimited capital and make "things hum," if only the dear people will assist them to induce the Legislature to build a wagon road to their property and "The Roarer" is the only one in the universe that has the necessary influence. The editor pockets all arrears and is sub in advance and the rest of the business men suffer a similar ordeal, and in a short while the road is built.

Three months later—"Everything is going along about as usual at the mine."

Six months later—"We have no information of any kind for the public."

We recollect a case of this kind in West Kootenay and the manager spent many a sleepless night for refusing us news—his trouble was that the news was invariably correct although he allowed none but employees on the ground. One day he came into the office in a terrible rage and in a foreign language said things that were more forcible than polite, and finally demanded how we got our news, declaring that he would discharge every employee.

Imagine his disgust when shown a correct map of all the workings on his property with every foot of ore carefully marked. Within a few days he had come to his senses and agreed for the future to supply all the news himself—he did it faithfully.

THE OUTCROP has been very fortunate in this respect and have to thank the managers here for many kindnesses. They are all anxious to assist in disseminating the news of the district and the upbuilding of the district. Only one outfit has tried to injure the district and that for a greedy purpose, and they have been proven false prophets at every turn.

MAKE THEM BELIEVE IT

This world's full of people as useless as dust.

But you never could make them believe it.

Like jokes that the almanac editors spin, so pointless they seldom awaken a grin.

They're only created, you know, to fill in. But you never could make them believe it.

The duke is a sock on the face of the earth.

But you never could make him believe it.

His sanity far overshadows his worth. But you never could make him believe it.

He's earnest with a very weak spot of his brain.

In viewing himself he's exceedingly vain.

By all worthy people he's held in the chain.

But you never could make him believe it.

The dirt is a blot on the name of his sex.

But you never could make him believe it.

Towards her the simpatons rubber their necks.

But you never could make her believe it.

She's useless on earth as a hand-painted doll.

Is twofold assurance, the other, third, gull.

And some-day her guide will sustain a hard fall.

But you never could make her believe it.

The man with a wee is a nuisance we fear.

But you never could make him believe it.

Unwelcome the woman he puts in your way.

But you never could make him believe it.

He thinks over his griefs, friends are really sorry.

While all of the time you are wondering why.

He'd act tell his troubles to reflect shy.

But you never could make him believe it.

PASS ON THE PRAISE

"You are a great little fellow, and I can't leave what I've written you."

And as he spoke he put his arm about her and kissed her, and she began to cry.

For some for that moment. And, forgetting all, she sang as she washed the dishes, and sang on as she made the beds, and the song was heard next door.

And a woman there caught the refrain and sang also, and two houses were happy just because he had told her that secret old story, the story of the love of a husband for a wife.

As she sang the lady in orange who called for the order board, and went out whistling on his party, and the world heard the words, and one man hearing it thought here is not who loves his work.

And because she sang her heart was mellowed, and as she swept about the back door the good air kissed her on each cheek, and she thought of a poor old woman she knew, and a little basket went over to that home with a crate or two of wood.

So, because he kissed her and praised her, the song came, and the influence went out and out and out.

Pass on the praise.

A man said to me the other night, "Charmer, I enjoyed that little skit of yours yesterday." And in that moment I was glad, and things seemed brighter and better, for I am very human.

Pass on the praise.

A word and you may make a rift in the cloud, a smile and you may create a new resolve, a grasp of the hand and you may rescue a soul from hell.

Pass on the praise.

Does your clerk do well?

Pass on the praise.

Tell him that you are pleased.

If he is a good clerk he will appreciate it more than a raise.

A good clerk does not work for his salary alone.

Teacher if the child is good, tell him about it, if he is better tell him again, and he will be best.

Thou you see?

Good.

Better.

Best.

The Copper Supply.

The Native Copper Times takes the view that there is not an unusual supply of copper on hand. In support of its contention it quotes a statement made by a manufacturer of electrical supplies who said:

"If there should be a movement of the largest producers of copper looking to higher prices, the 100,000,000 pounds stored by the United Metals Selling Company could not last two weeks. I believe there are over 100,000,000 pounds less copper and brass in the hands of manufacturers now than there was a year or two ago, and we are doing a better business now than we were then."

Germany Wants Trouble.

The German newspaper have been indulging in some very unwise anti-British statements and cartoons, and indignation is expressed throughout the whole of the British Empire. After reciting different insults published by the German press the London Times remarks:

"But the crowning piece is a cartoon entitled 'Hero Worship'—the Princess of Wales, Queen Victoria, and the Prince of Wales standing, with the young Princess by their side, are adorning a youthful soldier; the legend underneath reads: 'An English Princess decorating the youngest soldier in the British army with the Victoria Cross, because, although only thirteen, he has already outraged eight Boer women.'"

"This obscenity sold in respectable shops was eagerly bought by the public and lies on fashionable drawing-room tables."

The Star censures the Times for publishing these things and says it ought to hesitate before it did deliberately it sets the passions of the people.

While it is sincerely hoped no serious trouble will arise, the Germans should be obliged to make public amendments for allowing such insults to be offered.

Premier Dunsmuir's Policy.

The policy enunciated by Premier Dunsmuir by his communication to the people of British Columbia brings the present political situation in the Province to a climax, and may be regarded as the Government's gage to its opponents. The Vancouver "Province," which has at times been opposed to the present administration, remarks fairly editorially: "Considered simply on its inherent merits, it is a particularly interesting and important document and is deserving of the most careful and dispassionate analysis. It touches more or less in detail every question demanding the consideration of any administration which earnestly desires the best interest of the people."

One feature of its pronouncement which will at once strike every reader is its absolute frankness and the straightforward manner in which every question referred to is handled. There is no attempt at concealment as to the position of the Government in every matter in which the Province is vitally interested; no juggling with words, no ambiguity in statement or promise. Everything is clear, so clear in fact that it leaves no possibility of hidden motives behind the action of the Premier.

The conditions at present obtaining and all the incidents leading up to them are so frankly set down that no room is left for denial by those to whose interests it would be to represent them in a different light. In this and other respects the Premier has taken the wind completely out of the sails of the Opposition and left it where it cannot fail to become the scoff of the Province. But he has done more than this; he has justified his past conduct of administration, and has shown that amid all the clamor raised against the Government by self-seeking politicians and the agents of monopoly he and his colleagues have been true to the interests of the country, and have been guarding its treasury against the assaults of irresponsible freebooters.

If not the most important portions of his pronouncement, at least those which are of greatest present interest, are those dealing with the duty of the Dominion, the Government's railway policy and redistribution and in these, the Premier leaves little to be said which could be given in the scope of a letter to the people. They are dealt with comprehensively enough and in sufficient detail to furnish us with a grasp of the facts, and show us exactly where the Government stands in regard to them.

The above coming from the "Province" is a strong recognition of the worth of the Premier's letter, which we regret reached us too late for publication—so much for our mail service. The "Province" has not been an ardent admirer of the Premier for some months and we do not believe it has taken a shot of "gold-cure" but that the flattering statements are honest opinions.

The lessons of adversity are often the most benignant when they seem the most severe. The depressions of vanity sometimes enoble the feeling. The mind which does not wholly sink under misfortune rises above it more lofty than before, and is strengthened under the afflictions. Chenevix.
